An Absurd Proposal

One of the curious features of the New York bluff for the reconciliation of the republican and progressive parties is the fact that it is physically impossible to carry it out. The New York republican convention shall revise the rules of the republican party so as to permit each state to elect its delegates under its own laws and to apportion these delegates, not in proportion to the whole population, but to the republican vote, at the same time saving the party principle that the individual district and not the state shall be the unit of election.

There are two physical impossibilities in this. One is that if the state law is to be paramount in the manner of electing delegates, no party committee can have the authority to set aside that law. It is impossible to guarantee that all the rules of all the parties shall be the same, or that the rule of any party shall remain the same from year to year. It is also impossible to guarantee that the laws of all the states shall be alike. It is, therefore, impossible for any state to enact a law which shall always conform to all the rules of all the parties every year, and it is impossible for any party to enact rules which will be sure to conform to the rules of all the other parties and to the laws of all the states. If the party rule is paramount to state law, every party every year will find itself repealing the laws of some of the states, and every state at every election will find some of its laws repealed, by some party. The only rule which will not break down in operation is thus to allow each state to enact its own laws as to the choice of electors, and then to have all the parties accept the delegates from each state on whatever terms of election are required by the laws of that state.

The other physical impossibility is the attempt to apportion delegates in accordance with the party vote and still enforce the district system. States are divided into districts in proportion to their population, and not in proportion to the vote of any party. Consequently, if the convention delegates are apportioned by party vote, the number of delegates from each state will almost never correspond to the number of districts in that state. Some states will have many more delegates than they have districts, and other states will have many more districts than they have delegates, and in neither case is one number likely to be an even multiple of the other. It would be impossible even by this method to make the apportionment at all accurate, and even a remote approach to accuracy would require a convention of such enormous membership that it would be physically impossible for it to transact its business if it ever succeeded in assembling.

The whole thing is a bluff based upon the assumption that the people can be bunked into not understanding it.

Colonists and Immigrants

With the opening of the Panama canal close at hand there is much glib talk of the tens of thousands of immigrants who are expected to flock to our shores from Europe. It is promised that they will be a great boon to the Pacific coast as settlers and laborers in all sorts of development work, and the promise may hold true, but it will be many years before immigration begins to reach the magnitude or importance of the colonist movement from the eastern and middle west states.

So many settlers of our own blood and speech are coming to the coast that the question is raised of the advisability of encouraging immigration by way of the canal. Figures given out by the railroad companies indicate that by the time the fall colonist season closes tomorrow, a total of 50,000 new residents will have been brought out from beyond the Missouri river. Next March the colonist rates on the railroads will be lowered again, when it is expected that at least 75,000 settlers will come, making a total of 125,000 in a year.

These are Americans chiefly—New Englanders, Pennsylvanians, and the sturdy farmer stock of Ohio, Indiana and Iowa—who are in search of homes in a better land. They are citizens of the republic and they know our customs, laws and institutions. They have a standard of living that is above the average in Europe, and when they come they are complete citizens from the start.

There is little danger that the supply of American settlers will be diminished. On the other hand, it increases every year. During the last twelve years the Southern Pacific alone has brought 750,000 persons into California as colonists. They are in the cities and on the farms, working, saving, developing, helping to pile up the yearly surplus that makes California ever richer and better as a place to live.

Under these conditions it is reasonable to assume that within five years, or before the immigration movement from Europe is fairly started, practically every available acre of California soil will be under cultivation by American farmers.

San Francisco ambulance drivers must be dignified and not travel faster than eighteen miles an hour, as it is hurtful to the patient. Life is growing tame with the suppression of the Barbary coast.

The Bonanza is glad to be set right. Francis M. Lyman, president of the council of twelve apostles of the Church of Latter-day Saints, says it is the duty of every young Mormon to get married.

Francis J. Heney says he has wearied of the moose movement and wants to climb back into the republican chariot. Stay where you are, Frank; nobody wants a weleher.

If this parcels post business keeps up a physical test will have to be added to the civil service examinations.

Queen Mary frowns on low frocks, but men smile on them. This means that décolleté will prevail.

TALLMAN CAN'T SWING HIS PARTY BACK INTO LINE

MAN FROM TONOPAH TRIES TO DO SOME MISSIONARY WORK IN IDAHO.

Complete failure attended the mission in Idaho of Clay Tallman, commissioner of the general land office, says a Boise special to the Herald-Republican. It was presumed at the beginning that the commissioner came on official business to inspect conditions in the United States land offices in the state. It is now known that his mission was wholly political—that the object of his visit was to bring about harmony between the two warring factions of the democracy in the state and to clear the way for making federal appointments. These appointments have been held up until this time, in spite of the fact that the terms of many of the incumbents have expired, because of the bitter fight that has been waged since the incoming of the democratic administration between the two democratic factions in the state.

Commissioner Tallman held conferences in private with Governor Hawley and Senator Perky. Then he invited John E. Nugent to call upon him at his room in the hotel. Nugent went. He took with him a bodyguard composed of Alexander, Pence, Martin, Kinyon, Smead and others who have been ready at all times to go to the last ditch with him. This delegation gave the commissioner clearly to understand that there was to be no compromise whatever over the patronage—that the reactionary democrats who, they said, fought Wilson and Bryan before the Baltimore convention and who gave Wilson beggarly support in the campaign were to have nothing whatever to say in distribution of the loaves and fishes; that they, the "progressive democrats," would much prefer to leave the federal offices in the hands of the republicans than to turn them over to the "reactionary democrats." It was a matter of principle with them, they told the commissioner, and in a matter of principle they knew no such word as compromise.

"Then am I to understand," demanded Commissioner Tallman, "that Governor Hawley, Senator Perky, Chairman Gray and Senator Dubois are to have nothing whatever to say about the distribution of the offices?"

"That is just exactly what you are to understand," was the uncompromising response.

Evidence was submitted to the commissioner to show that Hawley, Perky and Gray had tried to bring about the nomination of Judson Harmon; failing in that, that they had all swung in with Fred T. Dubois to bring about the nomination of Champ Clark, and at no time did they show any enthusiasm for Wilson and Bryan.

Commissioner Tallman left the city Thursday afternoon. The recommendations he made to his superiors can only be guessed at, but the fact remains that the democracy of Idaho is not yet united.

Quality Is the True Test of Cheapness

Price can often be used as a strong argument in some lines of business, because a cheaper grade often answers the purpose of the purchaser. But

IN THE DRUG BUSINESS

It is different. Cheap drugs will never take the place of pure, high-grade ones. Quality—regardless of price—should be the chief consideration of careful drug buyers. What you buy here in the line of drugs and medicines will be of right quality, and the price will be right, too.

Right goods, right service and right prices are usually closely associated. Come here for Drugs and Sundries.
